

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSIONS AND SUGGESTIONS

5.1 Conclusions

Based on the results of the data analysis discussed in the previous chapter, the researcher makes several conclusions about the eleventh-grade students' ability in mastering conditional sentences by using substitution drill at MAN Kota Solok as follows:

1. In general, eleventh-grade students had a high ability in mastering conditional sentences using substitution drills at MAN Kota Solok. It was shown by the data that more than 50% of students had high ability. In detail, 48 students (77%) had high ability, and 14 students (23%) had low ability.
2. The eleventh-grade students' ability in mastering conditional sentences type I was high. It was supported by the fact that 42 students (68%) had high ability.
3. The eleventh-grade students' ability in mastering conditional sentences type II was high. It was supported by the fact that 32 students (52%) had high ability.
4. The eleventh-grade students' ability in mastering conditional sentences type III was low. It was supported by the fact that 29 students (47%) had low ability.

5.2 Suggestions

Based on the above conclusions, the researcher would like to give several suggestions:

1. For teachers, since students' ability in mastering conditional sentences using substitution drills is high, it is recommended to provide motivation to maintain students' ability in mastering conditional sentence of types I, II, and III and provide more exercises in other forms. On the other hand, teachers are suggested to review conditional sentences type III because students' ability in mastering conditional sentence type III is low.
2. For students, it is suggested to maintain their ability in mastering conditional sentences of types I, II, and III and do exercises in other forms. For students who have a low ability in mastering conditional sentences of type III, it is suggested to review the material and try to do some exercises.
3. For future researchers, the researcher suggests determining students' ability in writing conditional sentences.
