ABSTRACT

This study aims to examine the effect of the presence of women on audit committee as an independent variable on audit fee as the dependent variable with audit risk and audit effort as mediating variables. The population in this study are all service companies listed on the Indonesia Stock Exchange in 2016-2018. Because not all companies disclose their audit fees, only 88 companies participated in this study. The data analysis method in this study uses a multilevel regression model that refers to procedures for testing the role of mediators. The results showed the presence of women on audit committee had no effect on audit fees, the presence of women on audit committee had no effect on audit risk, the presence of women on audit committee had no effect on audit effort, audit risk had a negative effect on audit fees, audit effort had no effect on audit fees, audit risk does not mediate the influence of the presence of women on audit committee on audit fees and the audit effort does not mediate the influence of the presence of women on audit committee on audit fees.
