This chapter present conclusion based totally on what observed on this research. This chapter also present some tips for the similarly researchers that studies about speech acts, especially directive speech act.

5.1 Conclusion

Based totally on the studies findings, there are a few factors that are solution the research question. The difference of directive speech acts types that determined and happened in the conversation of the characters within the You, Me and Dupree movie are command, suggestion, asking and request. The researcher determined 110 information. There are 46 commanding, 13 requesting, 16 suggesting, and 35 asking. type of speech acts that typically used in the communication of the characters in You, Me and Dupree film are commanding and asking. The dialogues of the characters shows it. for instance “give it to me” sentence shows a command from the speaker to get hearer to do some thing.

On this research, the directive speech acts also can be seen in three forms including imperative, interrogative, and declarative. The researcher observed 66 imperative form on this research. 44 imperative used in command, 12 imperative used in suggestion, and 9 imperative used in request. Then determined 2 declarative utilized in command. Interrogative form determined 35 in asking, 2 in suggestion, and 4 in request. in this studies, imperative and interrogative form generally found. it could be visible from the dialogue of the characters.

From explanation above, it concluded that each communication has many directive speech acts. And in conversations there are also there is any gender differences in directive speech of each character can be seen from the utterance. For example, The differences between how males and females, mainly couples, giving directive to their couple. Men often use direct command sentences, and women often use more polite forms of language than men. Whatever that is requesting, asking, suggesting, command, the important thing is directive speech act is how to make the hearer do something.

5.2. Suggestions.

This chapter presents suggestions that may be taken into consideration for future researchers on communication methods, in particular in the observe of directive speech acts. The researcher's first suggestion is communique in ordinary existence as an object of research look at. This take a look at will make an exception from the usage of movies or novels and other media research objects, that are the best for reading directive speech acts. second, the next researcher can evaluate the directive speech act concept by Searle with other experts. Of course this will be an thrilling studies due to the fact experts actually have distinctive components of directive speech acts. by way of comparing with numerous critiques, professionals can display and examine what are the similarities and variations in the components of directive speech acts among the two. Therefore, with this suggestion, the researcher really hopes that this studies can be stated to be a good reference for linguistic students and inspire them to behavior similarly analysis.
